> "In a neghboring county a fight has developed between rival bus lines. One party established a line, ran it at a loss for some time, and when it finally began to pay another party started in over the same route, timing his schedule a few minutes ahead and thus capturing the larger part of the patronage. The original bus people are protesting through the papers, but it will do no good. Competition may be the life of trade, but in small communities where patronage is limited it is often the death of enterprise. Where one business in a certain line might serve the public and make a fair profit, two or more in the same line make all lose money and eventually go to pot. That sort of thing is the curse of every small community. Nearly all lines are overdone. Nobody makes any money. Enterprise is stifled. Civic spirit is killed. And yet some people wonder why a

EVOLUTION OF JULY FOURTH

Two or three generations ago, judging by old newspapers, people Comings and Goings of Some You took much more interest in the real meaning of July Fourth. Banquets and oratorical gatherings were held everywhere, with expressions of fervent Americanism.

The glorious achievements of our country were celebrated, while the powers of Europe were spoken of as effete nations whose sun had set. of "Vagabond," winner of the recent position as bookkeeper in the Bour-old patriotic gatherings, even though some of the remarks would now sound rather crude.

The drought had begun to have an effect on tobacco and corn crops in many sections. The rains that fell in June were not sufficient to help the crops very materially. The hay crop has been harvested, the dry weather prevailing during the past two weeks being favorable to the ripening and satisfactory curing of this crop. Early corn has reached the tasseling stage, and with more rain, should produce some roasting ears soon. The fruit crop in general is promising and, with favorable weather, a bumper crop will be produced. Potatoes and oats have suffered most from the drought, and the blackberry crop may be short in some sections.
